Customer Reviews

I just love all of the books by this author that we have read as read aloud chapter books for my 4 and 6 year old. They are great. I love all the characters, and each chapter us like a separate story, and we go back to this and the others and reread their favorite chapters often. Kids like the pictures too. Great non scary, well written, clever, kind, early chapter books.

I read this aloud to my 5year old daughter. She liked it almost as much as Little House on the Prairie. In fact, this book reminds me a lot of the Little House series- an episodic chapter book, where the children get into little scrapes and mishaps, but the wise father and kind mother always make sure we finish each chapter feeling good. My five year old particularly liked the chapter where the main character tries to cook his mother breakfast in bed. She felt Huey's disappointment when his meal was inedible. And she was relieved when father came and helped cook. The two brothers quarreled about which spices to add, but that quarrel was quickly ended with the kind wisdom of Father. (incidentally, even my nine-year old enjoyed listening to a chapter or two, but it wasn't his favorite)

This book will be given as part of a library that is being established for children in Kenya. This seems like a book that will interest young children and will inspire them to read. The wording is simple, and I love the colorful book cover with the boy and the zebra. Perfect for young minds.

THIS IS JUST GREAT! I love it. Huey tells LOTS of stories about his life, He tries to make banana spaghetti and he paints animal tracks to fool his brother: Julian. He tries to go on a trip to Africa... but it doesn't turn out the way he expects. This book is great for reading out loud, or with your friends.

I was so happy to find books with african american children in starring roles. My nephew loves the series of books.
